INTRODUCTION

The Dalma Wildlife Sanctuary (WLS), situated in the Chhota Nagpur Plateau of Jharkhand near the city of Jamshedpur, is of immense significance both ecologically and culturally. Notified in 1976 under the Wildlife (Protection) Act, 1972, the Sanctuary spans across East Singhbhum and Seraikela-Kharsawan districts, and is a critical habitat for the Asian elephant and several other endangered species. Given the Steel city of the country is about 25kms away, a healthy buffer is necessary to absorb ecological shocks, the Ministry of Environment, Forests and Climate Change, Government of India, hence notified an Eco-Sensitive Zone (ESZ) around the sanctuary on 29th March 2012, extending up to five kilometers from its boundary. This ESZ covers 136 villages—including 85 enclave villages and 51 peripheral villages—spread across a total area of 522.98 sq. km.

The ecological integrity of the Dalma Wildlife Sanctuary is deeply interwoven with the socio-economic realities of the communities that inhabit its landscape. For generations, these communities have sustained their livelihoods through agriculture, collection of forest produce, and pastoral practices, maintaining a symbiotic relationship with the forest ecosystem. As a part of the tribal belt of the country, the sanctuary and its surrounding areas are predominately occupied by diverse tribal groups, including the Santhals, Singh Sardars, Ho, and Munda, as well as members of Particularly Vulnerable Tribal Groups (PVTGs) such as the Birhor, Pahadiya, and Sabar communities. However, the region has witnessed increasing anthropogenic pressures in recent decades, particularly in the form of industrial expansion, quarrying, and other infrastructural development projects. They pose significant threats to both ecological stability and cultural continuity, emphasising the urgent need for environmentally responsible and socially inclusive planning.

In line with the 2012 ESZ notification, and the guidelines proposed by the Wildlife Institute of India, a comprehensive understanding of the demographic, economic, social, and ecological dependencies of these communities is essential. This is crucial for designing an integrated and participatory strategy that balances biodiversity conservation with sustainable development.

To support this mandate, the Fr. Arrupe Centre for Ecology and Sustainability (FACES), XLRI Jamshedpur, in collaboration with the Department of Environment, Forests and Climate Change, Government of Jharkhand, undertook a detailed village-level socio-economic survey in selected villages falling within the ESZ.

This report summarizes findings from 28 villages surveyed during Phase II of the ZMP preparation process.

The larger objective of the Zonal Master Plan is to create a buffer area that minimizes negative ecological impacts on the sanctuary while allowing sustainable development in surrounding human settlements.

This study aims to map the socio-economic patterns and infrastructural services available in these villages.

METHODOLOGY

The methodology is a combination of secondary data and field visits, which is phased and participatory, aiming to gather both quantitative and qualitative information from the villages. While the notification mentions 136, the Jharkhand Forest Department has identified 85 non-territorial villages that are in and around the wildlife sanctuary. These villages are distributed across the East and West Forest ranges, covering an area of about 398.58 square kilometers. Since three of the listed villages have become a part of the local municipality, the total number of rural villages considered in the study is 82.

A detailed list of data, maps, and documents were requested from the Jharkhand Forest Department. These included the sanctuary's official management plan, the list of ESZ villages, micro-plans, forest fires, flora, fauna, related data, etc.

Additionally, village-level information regarding demographics and infrastructure was requested from the Divisional Development Officer (DDO)

The study aims to cover all 82 villages in 3 rounds, with around 30 villages covered in each phase. Unlike a research project, the execution of the Zonal master plan would have implications on all the villages in the eco-sensitive zone and hence covering all of them, considering all of their concerns seems necessary.

An initial field reconnaissance was carried out in February and March, covering 33 villages. The researchers were accompanied by the local forest team. The initial visits helped them understand the local conditions, gather early insights, and identify relevant themes. Based on this, a structured questionnaire was developed (with themes like demography, infrastructure, agriculture, forest dependency, etc.). This was further reiterated upon in consultation with various professors and resource persons.

A workshop was also organized at the end of March for forest officials, including the Divisional Forest Officer (DFO), range officers, sub-beat officers, foresters, and guards. The session aimed to ensure that all officials had a shared understanding of the ESZ guidelines and to address the gaps in communication between the department and the villages. Many villagers had expressed concern over the fear of eviction, which needed to be clearly addressed.

Although the researchers stuck to the traditional print outs and pencils, Kobo Toolbox, was used to create the survey, feed and represent the data collected. The team (consisting of two researchers) prepared a visiting schedule, the local forester or guards were informed in advance, and the eco-development committee head (if present) helped mobilise people. A total of 28 villages were covered in months of May and June.

In addition to the survey, a mapping exercise was conducted in each village as part of participatory rural appraisal (PRA). The villagers drew maps marking important local features such as forests, sacred groves, schools, fields, water sources, and other public spaces. These maps supported better understanding of local land use and the community's spatial understating.

After each village survey, the ESZ notification was handed to a representative from the village, emphasising on the list of activities that are permitted, regulated, and prohibited. This helped in addressing confusion and provided clarity on the implications of the ESZ.

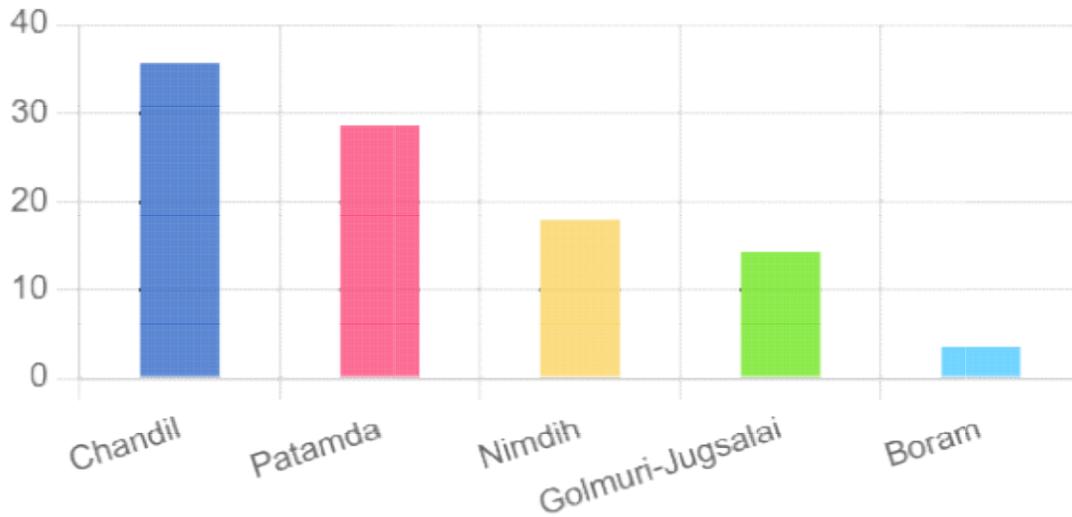

One key gap identified during the fieldwork was the limited participation of people from the Particularly Vulnerable Tribal Groups (PVTGs). These communities, often located in small hamlets (Tolas) near forests, were not present in most village meetings. Given their relatively higher dependence on forest resources and their distinct needs, a separate, focused survey be carried out specifically with PVTG households.

This is a preliminary study covering only 28 of those 82 villages.

RESULTS AND DISCUSSIONS

DEMOGRAPHY

The 28 villages fall under three blocks of Patamda, Golmuri-Jugsalai and Boram in East Singhbhum and two blocks of Chandil and Nimdih in Saraikela-Kharsawan. 16 of the 28 villages fall in the west range and 12 are a part of the east range.

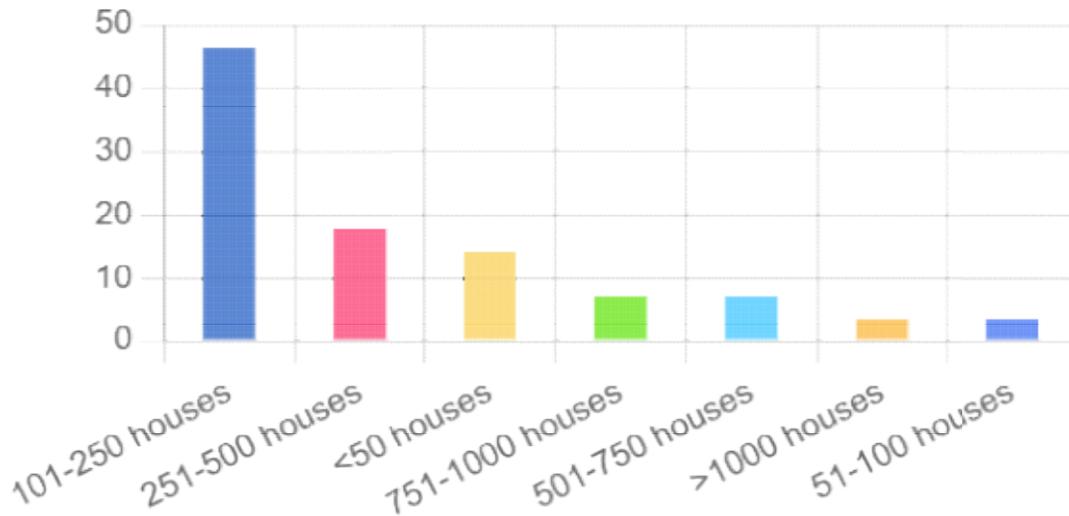

Graph 1: District-level distribution of villages

Graph 2: Range-level distribution of villages

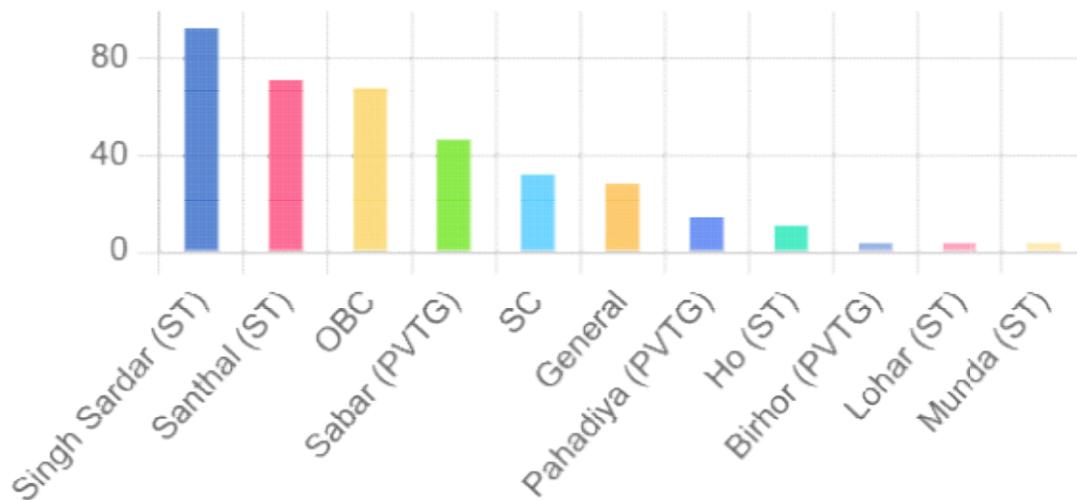

Various types of settlements are seen in the Eco-sensitive zone with a couple of villages having fewer number of households (less than 50) and many villages having tolas (hamlets) around the main village where the number of households range from about 750-1000. The villages in the western division were more clustered while the villages in the eastern division had more tolas and were scattered, based on different categories such as caste and religion.

Graph 3: Approximate number of households

The landscape is dominated by various tribal communities like Santhal, Ho, Singh sardar, Munda, Oraon and Lohar. Several villages also have presence of social groups like General, SC, OBC and PVTGs.

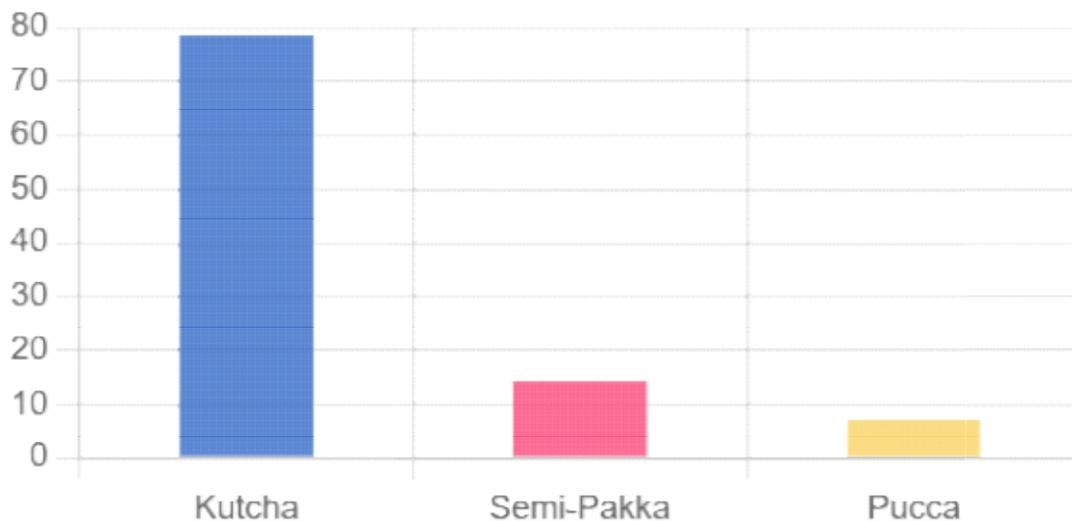

Graph 4: Community-wise distribution

The PVTGs residing in the eco-sensitive zones are Pahadiya, Birhor and Sabar. These communities have a very scattered presence among these villages ranging from 5 houses of Sabar in Chakulia to around 40 houses in Jorisa.

Generally, these PVTGs settlements are found near the forest, and they seem to share a closer relationship with the forest and make brooms and sieves using bamboos and ropes from the leaves and bark of Chihod tree.

People from Jorisa and Jamdih were also involved in pottery.

In most villages, majority of houses were kutcha (mud houses with straw roofing). Four villages were found to have more semi-pukka houses (Mud walls with khapra roofing), in only two villages pukka houses were predominant.

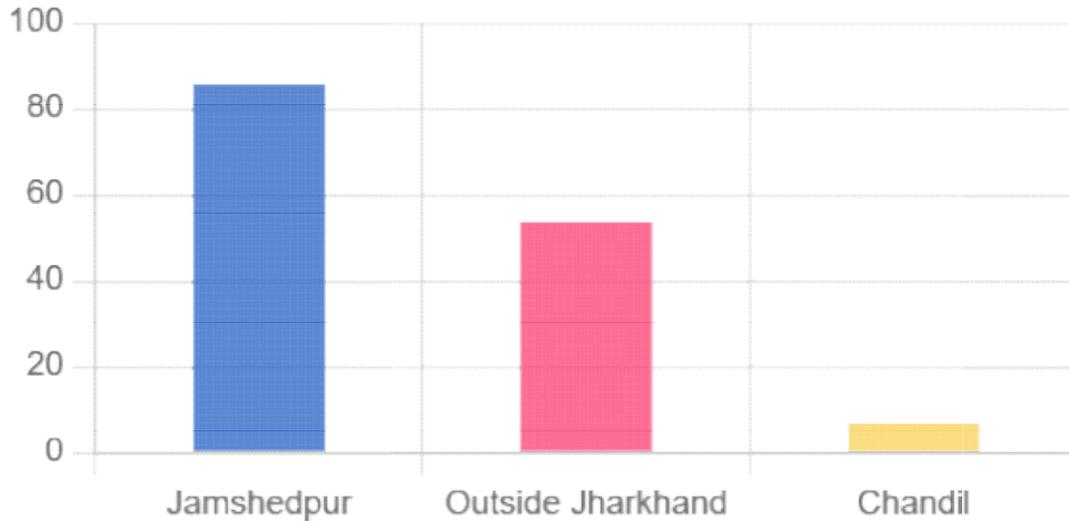

Graph 5: Type of houses

Housing schemes like PM Awas Yojana and Abua Awas Yojana are aiding people to build pukka houses. The villagers felt that the problems in these schemes were insufficient funding, delayed installments, and rejection of applications.

When it comes to the major religions practiced, tribal populations predominantly adhere to Sarna (animist and ancestor worship traditions), though some follow Hinduism. Non-tribal populations are largely Hindu, with only two villages (Jariyadih and Jhunjka) reporting some Christian presence.

EMPLYOMMENT

The villagers travel for work, primarily to Jamshedpur with people from two villages i.e. Ugdih and Jharidih going to Chandil. About 15 villages report out-migration to other states such as Odisha, Tamil Nadu, Maharashtra, and Gujarat.

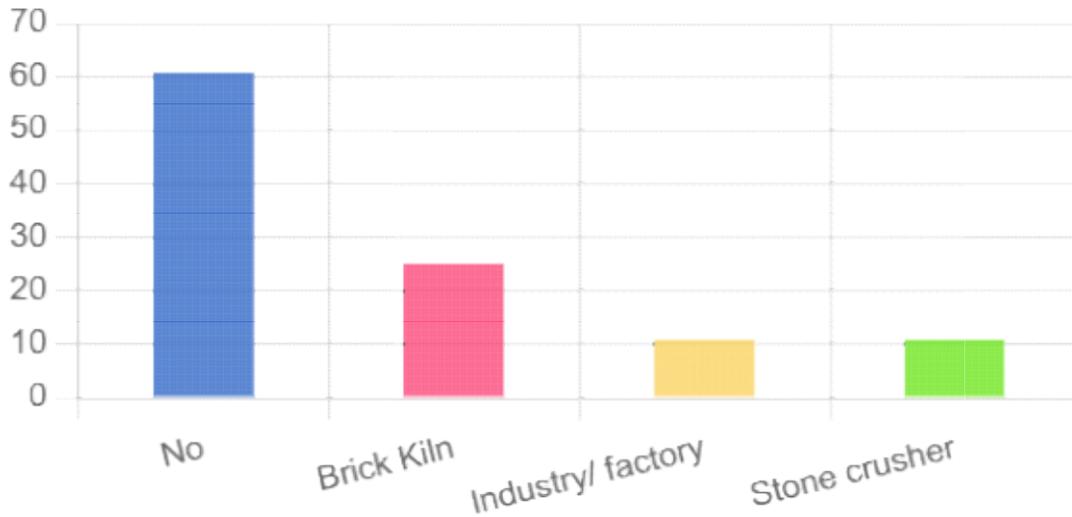

Graph 6: Places of work

People from all the 28 villages go outside their village for work throughout the year depending on the availability. People going to work in Jamshedpur travel daily from their village. Those who were going outside Jharkhand generally went for a longer time like 6 months or more.

People coming to Jamshedpur for employment have been seen to be engaged in different kinds of activities, depending on their skills with the wage ranging from ₹150 to ₹600, depending on the type of work. People going outside Jharkhand for work have a higher wage than those going to Jamshedpur.

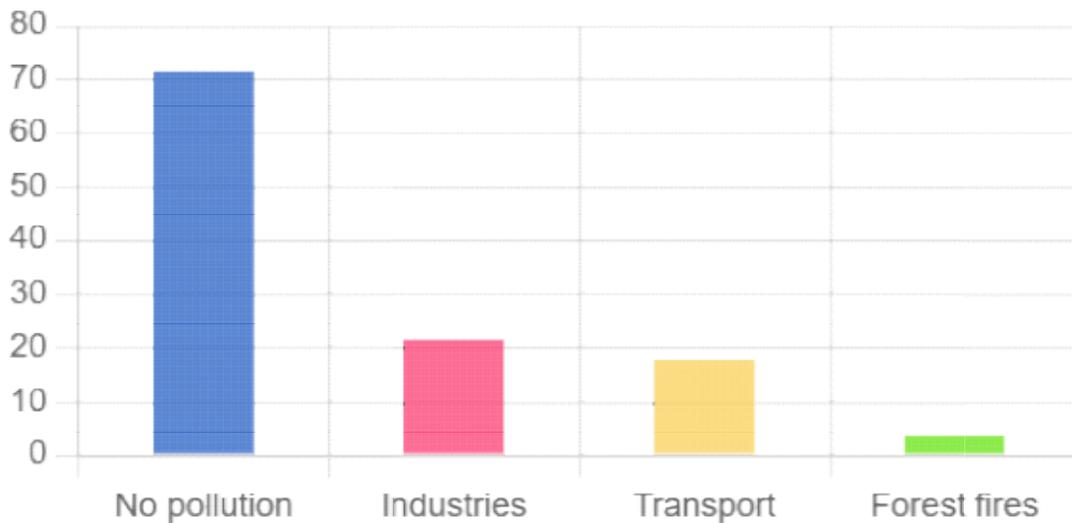

Employment under MGNREGA varies from 5% to 75%. As the wage they get from working in Jamshedpur is more than that provided in MNREGA, people prefer to go out to work in Jamshedpur and Chandil. Despite of having job cards, people do not work under these schemes as the wage is not given on a timely basis. Nowadays, few work is being done under this scheme as the contractors are now using modern machinery for work, like JCB for constructing ponds.

Graph 7: Presence of Brick Kiln, Mining and Quarrying

There are quarrying, mining and brick kiln sites present in the periphery of the ESZ. 7 villages have presence of brick kiln sites, 3 have some kind of industry or factory and 3 have stone crushers. Despite the presence of mining, quarrying, and brick kiln industries near the ESZ (in 13 of the 28 villages), local employment opportunities from these industries remain minimal.

Furthermore, these industries contribute significantly to air, water, and soil pollution.

Graph 8: Sources of Pollution

INFRASTRUCTURE

Electricity and Communication: Electricity and mobile network coverage are available in nearly all villages, except Jamdih, which lacks network access.

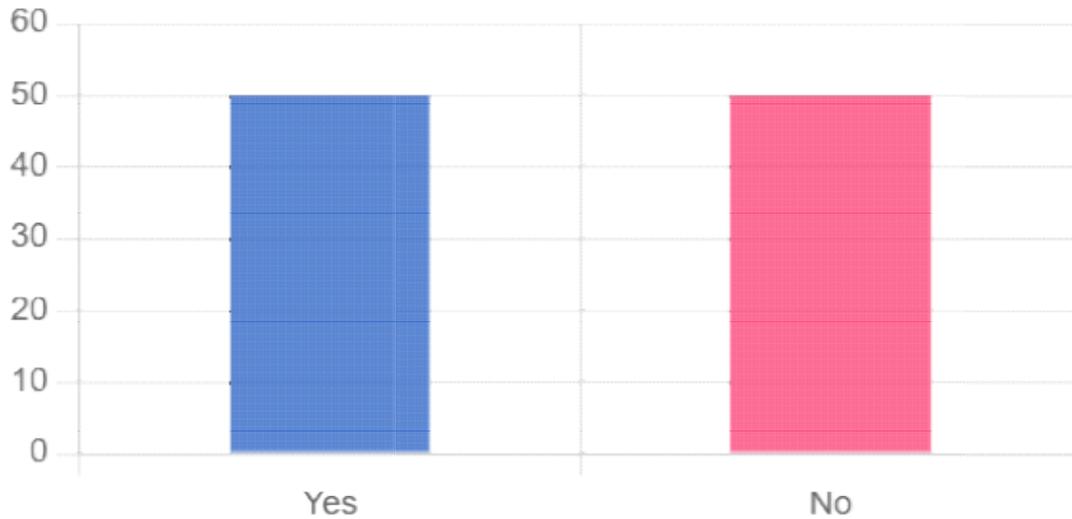

Image 1: A pucca road in one of the villages

Roads: About fourteen villages are connected to the main road via all-weather roads. The remaining rely on kutchra roads, which become impossible to use during the monsoons. Majority of villages do not have pucca roads especially to connect the tolas within. Few villages also have limited patches of tarred or concrete roads.

Image 2: Most roads become worse during the rains

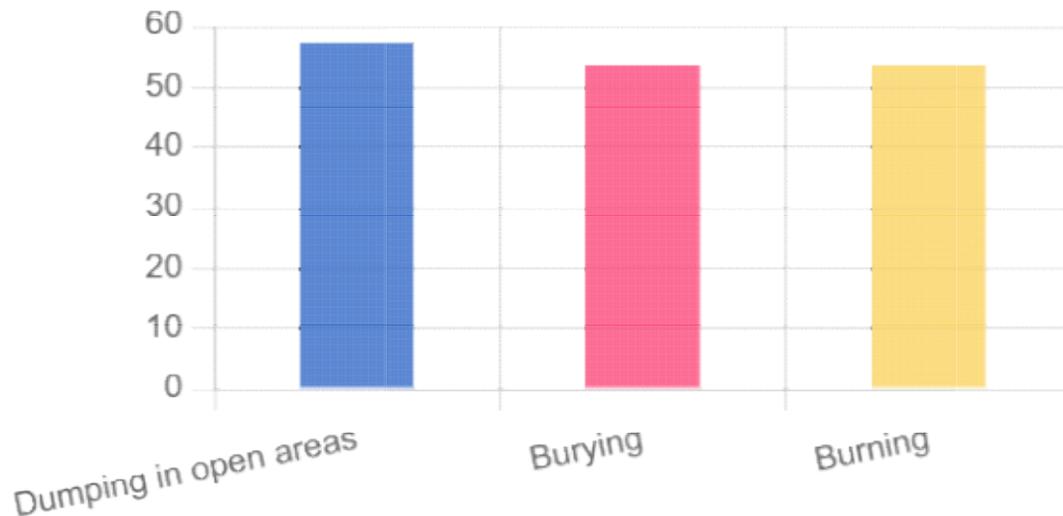

Graph 9: Availability of an all-weather road

The absence of proper roads affects access to essential services such as healthcare, education, and public distribution systems. For instance, in Punsu, ambulance services are unavailable due to poor road conditions.

Drainage and Waste Management: Most villages lack a basic drainage system to manage wastewater and runoff. Resulting in water entering the villagedamaging their houses and roads during the rains. Only Bamni, Jamdih, and Apo reported limited drainage facilities.

Most villagers burn or bury plastic waste. Organic waste is typically composted in household pits or even used as fodder for pigs

Graph 10: Disposal of waste

Mostly all villages have toilets built under Swachh Bharat Mission (about 8-10 years ago) with the help of some contractor but presently very few people are using it. This is because of issues like water scarcity, toilet pit being small, construction of toilets being done with poor quality material like black brick.

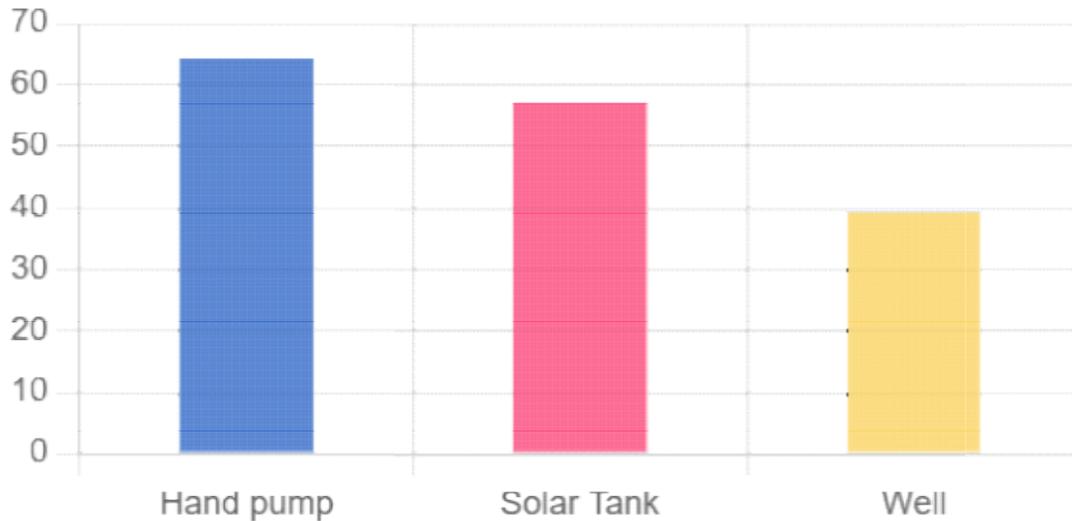

Image 3: Most of the Swatch Bharat Abhiyaan toilets are in a dire state

Drinking water

Water scarcity is a critical issue prevalent in most villages, particularly during summer. Most villages depend on handpumps and solar-powered tanks for drinking water, with a few using wells.

Image 4: Most wells dry up during the summer

Graph 11: Major source of drinking water

Solar water systems and streetlights have been installed in several villages, but maintenance issues limit their functionality. They typically have a functional lifespan of only three to four years. There is no government provision for repair, and distribution is skewed across villages and tolas.

During the summer months, the groundwater table drops significantly, leading to acute water scarcity in many villages. As a result, the entire community often becomes reliant on a single water source. The solar-powered water tanks, which are meant to alleviate this issue, are not always effective—particularly during the rainy season when there isn't enough sunlight for the motor to pump up the water. In several villages, these solar tanks are located far from the main settlement or tolas. Moreover, not all tolas are equipped with their own solar tanks, forcing people to depend on neighbouring tolas. The quality of water also varies across locations, with some villagers reporting contamination and high levels of iron.

Transportation

Only 12 of the 28 villages have access to regular bus services. The rest depend on auto-rickshaws, taxis, motorcycles, bicycles, or walking. Many villagers have to walk long distances for even essential services.

Image 5: Solar tanks are an issue during rains

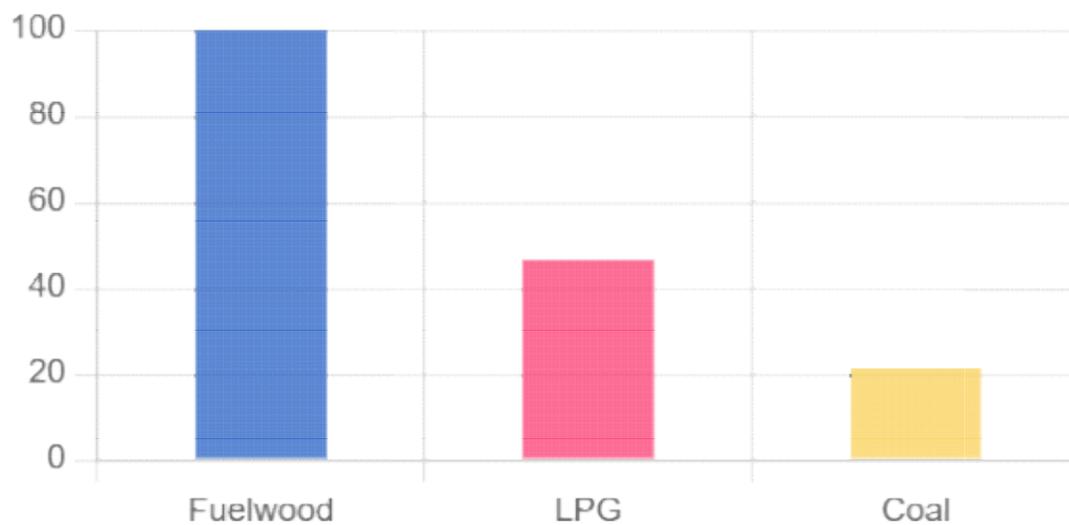

Image 6: Most villages have access to electricity

Cooking fuel

Fuelwood remains the dominant cooking fuel across all villages. Out of the 28 villages, 13 use LPG in addition to fuelwood; however, its usage is limited due to the high cost. Even those who do refill their LPG cylinders report having to travel long distances to do so, which increases their overall expenses.

Though people have received gas cylinders under the PM Ujjwala Yojana, very few of them use it. On the other hand, fuelwood is easily available and inexpensive.

Despite these alternatives, fuelwood remains the primary source of cooking fuel, as it is readily available from nearby forests. Households collect fuelwood based on their needs—some gather it daily, while others do so weekly. Most villages, however, tend to stockpile enough fuelwood to last around three months, preparing them for the rainy season.

Graph 12: Sources of fuelwood

Additionally, 6 villages—located in the Nimdih and Chandil blocks of Saraikela-Kharsawan district—also use coal for cooking. These villages are situated near Chandil station, from where they source coal dust.

Image 7: Some villages also use coal

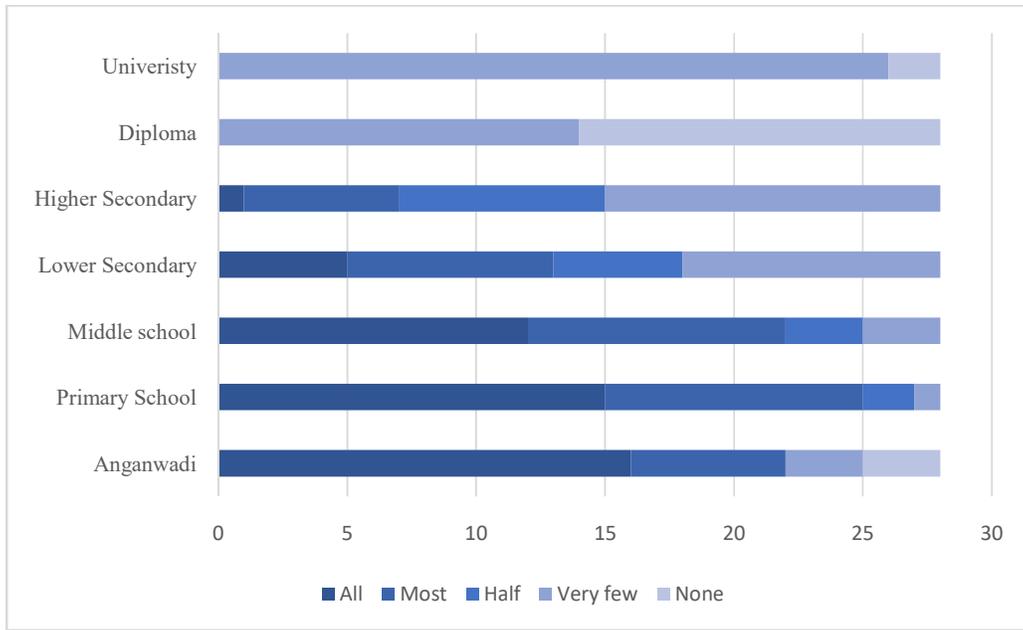

EDUCATION

Most villages have Anganwadi centres and schools up to the middle level (Classes 5–8). Secondary education (Classes 9–12) often requires travel to neighbouring villages. Attendance declines with increase in distance and level of education. In some instances, Anganwadi centres operate from private homes and lack proper infrastructure or educational materials.

The challenges with the education system in these areas are poor student–teacher ratio, teachers being assigned with administrative duties rather than classroom teaching. Few students pursue higher education, vocational training or private schools, due to financial constraints.

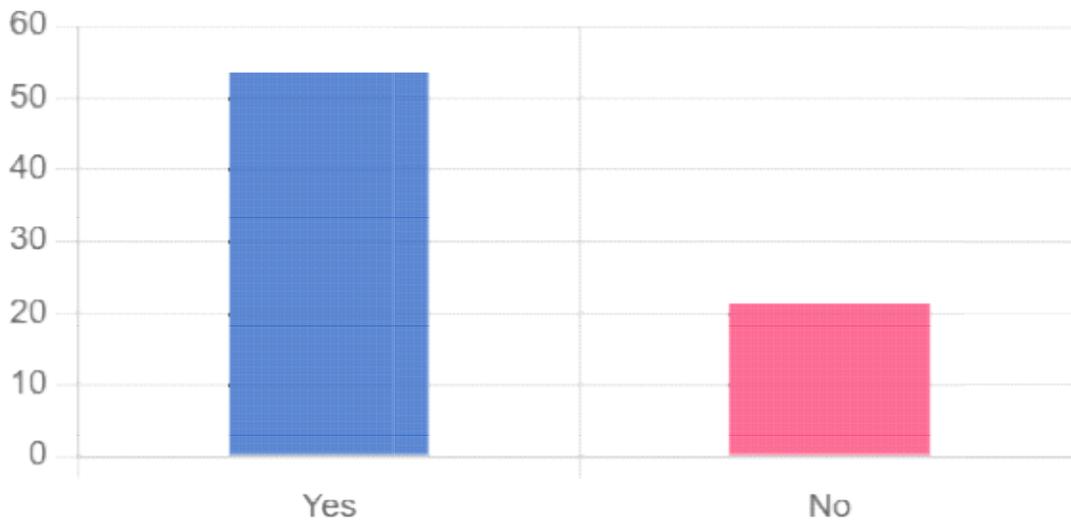

Image 8: Almost all the children go to their nearest primary school

HEALTH

Fifteen villages reported access to ambulance services. The remaining suffer due to poor road infrastructure. Although some villages have primary health centres, these are often non-functional, lacking medical personnel and essential supplies. As a result, villagers rely on private healthcare or travel to Jamshedpur for treatment.

Graph 14: Ambulances service is available in most villages

Graph 15: People's medical preference depends on access and affordability

CSR INITIATIVES

TATA group has worked in few of these villages in various areas like sustainable livelihoods, education, health and infrastructure. Tata Group has implemented initiatives in several villages, including infrastructure development (ponds, washrooms, solar lighting), health services (mobile vans), and livelihood support. Collaborations with HDFC Parivartan, NABARD, and others have furthered access to training, agriculture inputs, and small enterprises.

Years ago, the Tagore Society of Rural Development worked (in Jorisa) in plantation related drives.

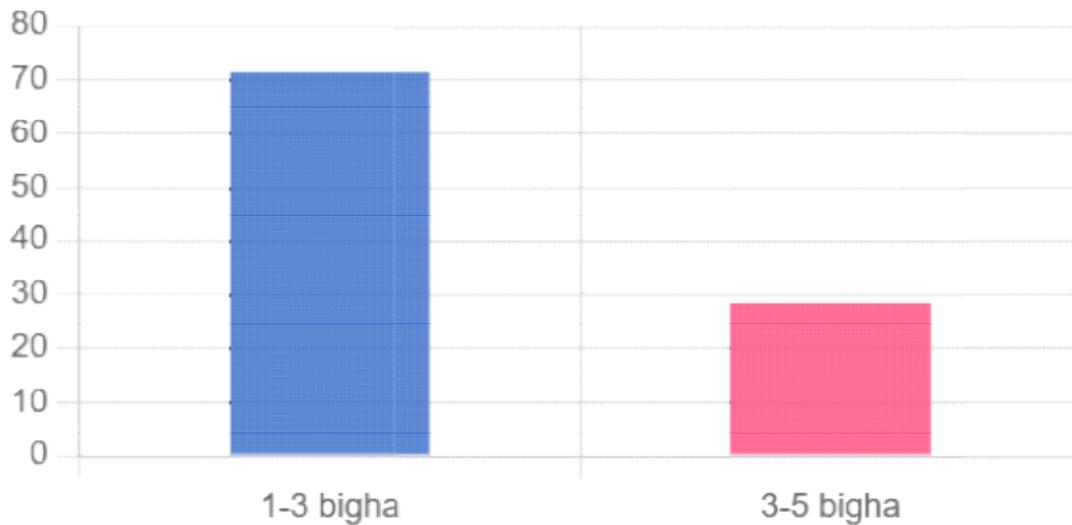

In Dhobani, Institute of Professional Research has provided solar-based irrigation facilities and has also constructed a pond for fishing.

Image 9: Tata Steel has worked with SHGs

AGRICULTURE

In approximately 20 villages, average landholdings range between 1–3 bighas, while in another 8 villages, holdings are slightly larger at 3–5 bighas. Agriculture in these areas is predominantly rainfed, with rice and vegetables (like brinjal, tomatoes, bitter gourd, okra, etc.) being cultivated in nearly all villages, largely for subsistence. Surplus produce is sold, particularly rice, which is commonly sold to middlemen who visit the villages. Although the rate offered through the government’s LAMPS (Large Area Multi-Purpose Societies) system is higher, farmers often avoid it due to delays in payment, preferring quicker although lower returns from local traders. Rice prices vary across villages, generally ranging from ₹1500 to ₹2000 per quintal.

Some villages also grow pulses, maize, and wheat, primarily for household consumption. In years of good yield, small quantities are sold. The number of people growing wheat has reduced over the years given the fall in the water table and high risk of pest infestation.

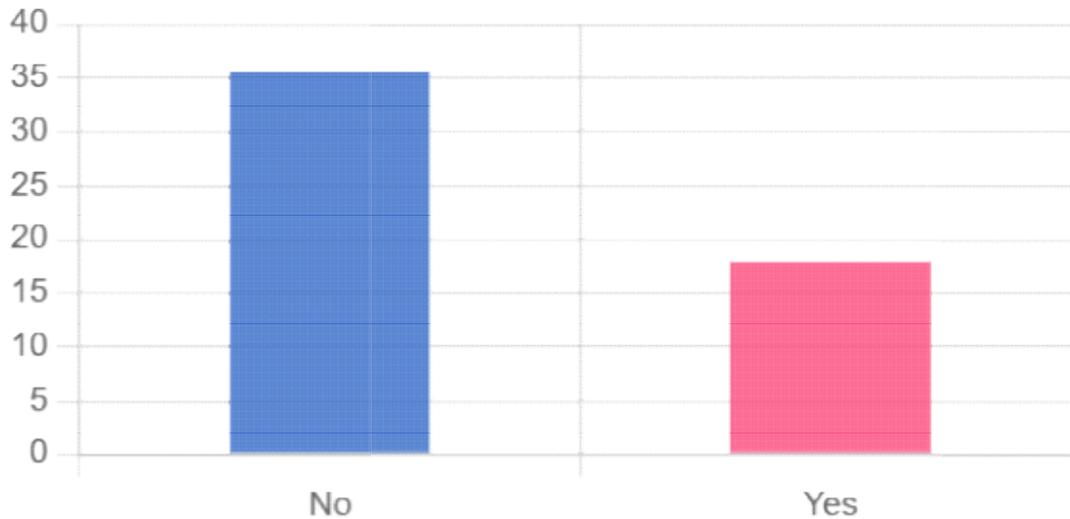

Most villages use both tractors and traditional bullock ploughs for farming. The use of chemical pesticides is widespread, though some villages only resort to them during infestations. Tractor rentals typically cost between ₹1000 and ₹1600 per hour.

Irrigation facilities are largely absent. Although canals exist, there is no infrastructure in place to use it for agriculture. A few villages have ponds and wells that assist with irrigation needs.

Groundwater availability varies significantly across the Eco-Sensitive Zone (ESZ), with some villages accessing water at 50 feet, while others must dig as deep as 500 feet.

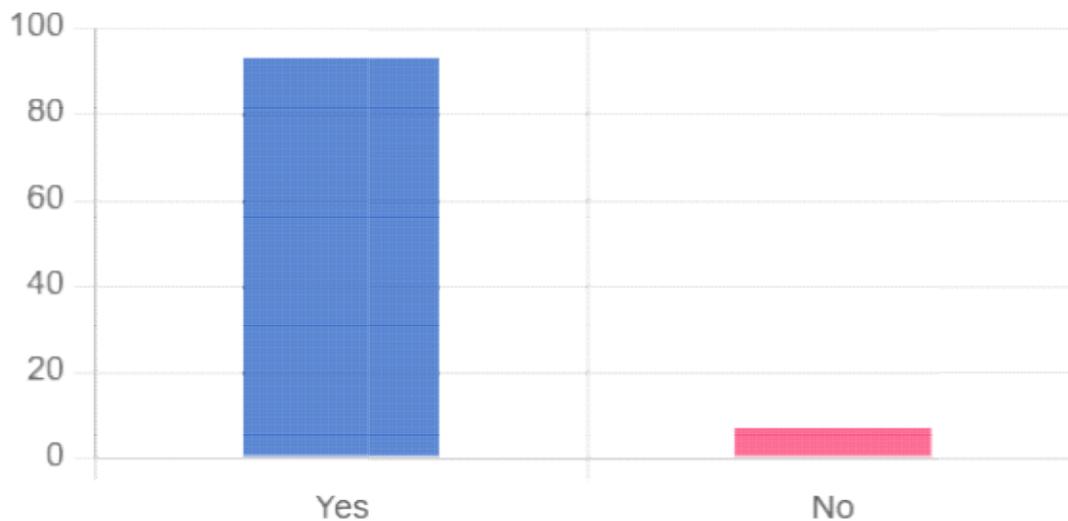

OTHER ALLIED ACTIVITIES

Sixteen villages have ponds, either government-constructed or privately owned. Government ponds serve as community resources, while private ponds are restricted to individual use. In some cases, privately owned ponds are used for fish farming, with fish sold in local markets, including Jamshedpur and weekly haats. In most cases, fishing is not practiced on a commercial scale.

Graph 16: Sale of fish

Self-Help Groups (SHGs) are active in 26 villages, primarily engaged in savings and credit activities. Some SHGs have received training in agriculture, beekeeping, pickle-making, and other skills through initiatives by JSRDS and the Forest Department. However, training programs are often conducted in distant locations such as Ranchi or Jamshedpur, limiting participation. When conducted locally, trainings tend to be too short (e.g., a 3-day sewing workshop), which undermines their effectiveness. There is a need for more extensive training and development of a supply chain for sustainable skill development.

Graph 17: Presence of SHGs

In two villages, SHGs had been formed but eventually dissolved due to inactivity. SHG membership varies widely—from 11 to over 200 members—based on the village population. Typically, each SHG has 10–12 members, and many villages host more than one group.

Image 10: Very few people practice pottery

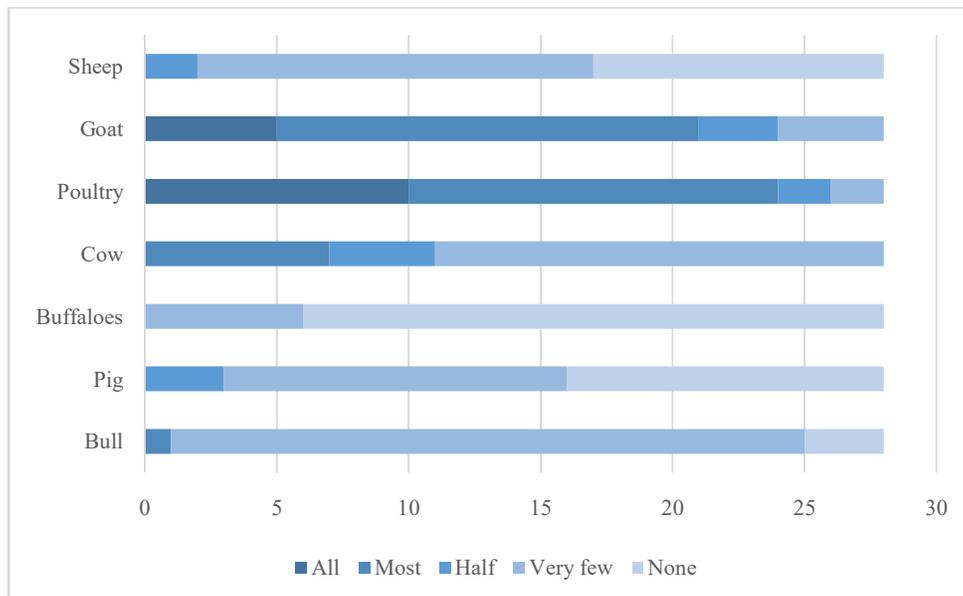

LIVESTOCK

Livestock ownership is common across nearly all villages. Most households rear goats and poultry, while some also keep cows, bulls, pigs, buffaloes, and sheep. Pigs are primarily raised by the Santhal community. Buffaloes are relatively rare due to their high-water requirements.

Number of people owning livestock has reduced in some villages due to road kills (National Highway) and as mentioned by one of the respondents- it was children who would earlier take them for grazing but nowadays children go to school. Bulls are replaced by tractors and some times the animals are seen as a liability more than an asset.

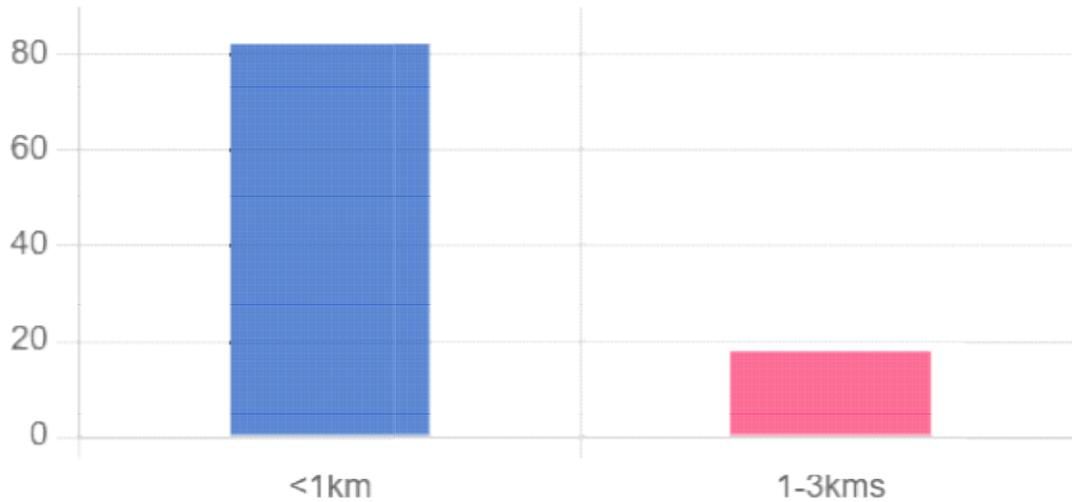

Image 11: Goats seem to be very common

Graph 18: Distribution of livestock

FOREST AND WILDLIFE

Most villages are located within 1 km of forested areas; only five villages lie at a distance of 1–3 km. Living in close proximity to forests, villagers benefit from a variety of forest products. The most widely collected product is sal leaves, used for personal events like weddings and religious ceremonies, as well as for commercial purposes—particularly in making disposable plates. Tendu leaves are also collected but only few villages sell them. Plucking tendu leaves inside the Eco-sensitive zone is prohibited but it was mentioned that sometimes people from West Bengal come over to collect these leaves; other forest-derived items include fruits such as bel, piyal, kendu, burru, aam, and benchi, along with flowers like jirhul and mahua, which are mainly consumed by the people. Mushrooms, collected during the monsoon, are either consumed or sold depending on the quantity gathered and access to markets.

Graph 19: Distribution of villages based on distance from the forest

Forest Fire

Almost all villages experience forest fire, which occur due to both natural and human-induced causes. Natural fires may result from extreme heat during the summer, while human-induced causes include carelessly discarding lit bidis or cigarettes in the forest and collecting mahua.

Several villages reported that fires often originate in adjacent villages or from across the forest, eventually spreading to their areas and causing significant ecological damage. In villages situated close to forests, people often with the support of the Forest Department take part in firefighting efforts. However, in villages where the forest is farther away, people are generally less involved in such activities.

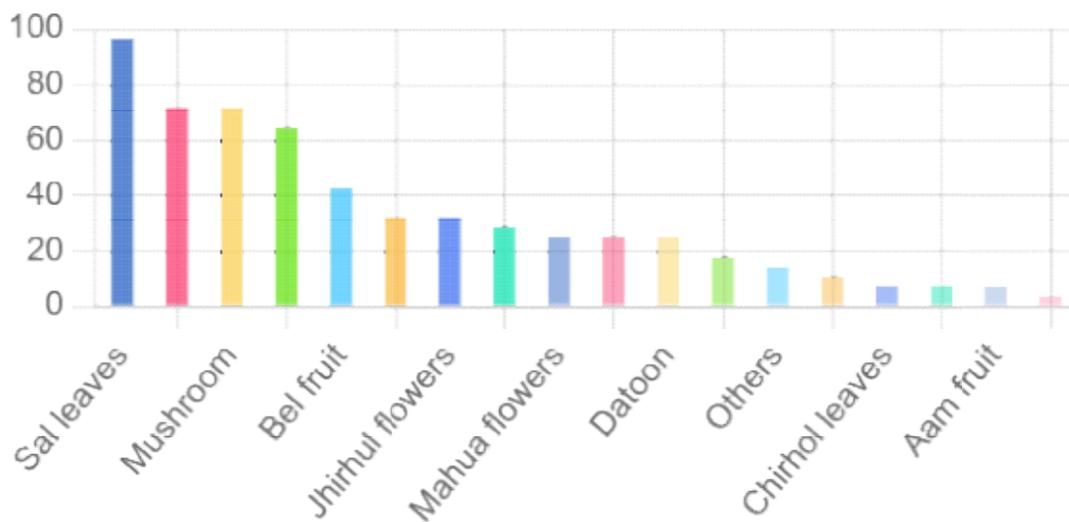

In a few villages, people who assist the Forest Department in controlling forest fires receive remuneration. These individuals are typically engaged for a period of about three months and earn approximately ₹6,000 -7,000 per month for their work. But in most of the villages, remuneration have not been given to those engaged in firefighting activities.

In recent years, villagers have observed a decline in forest fire incidents, attributing it to increased vigilance by both the local communities and the Forest Department.

Image 12: Collection of Sal leaves is very common

Bamboo is sold seasonally, for example, during Mahavir Jayanti, when contractors visit the villages. Bamboo is also used by PVTG (Particularly Vulnerable Tribal Group) communities such as the Pahariya and Sabar to make brooms.

Graph 20: Collection of NTFP

Image 13: Bamboo brooms

Fuelwood

Out of 28 surveyed villages, 8 reported selling fuelwood, driven largely by economic necessity and easy forest access. The price of fuelwood varies across different locations. Each headload collected from the forest typically weighs between 20 to 40 kilograms, depending on the individual's physical capacity. The selling price ranges from around ₹100 for 50 kilograms to ₹270 for 60 kilograms. These fuelwood bundles are purchased by various consumers, including hotel owners operating around Dimna Lake. Although the resource is freely available, overharvesting can impact forest sustainability.

Sacred Groves

Sacred groves are found in almost all the surveyed villages. These groves are culturally significant spaces bound by customary rules of the community. They are known by various names, such as Jaherthan among the Santhals, Abge Jaher for different gotras, and Ergo Seem, which is considered to belong to the entire village.

Each village has one or more sacred groves, depending on the number and diversity of communities residing there. These groves are typically located either on the village boundary or within nearby forests. Most of the religious ceremonies are held within these groves and are conducted by the community priest, referred to as the Laya or Naike. For those situated within the village, people visit them annually for religious purposes.

The groves primarily consist of patches of Sal trees, where tree felling is strictly prohibited and boundaries are clearly marked. Only a few sacred groves have built boundary walls; in most cases, the boundaries are demarcated with simple fencing. Many villagers have expressed a desire to construct proper boundary walls around these sacred spaces to preserve their sanctity.

Image 14: Fuelwood is available and affordable

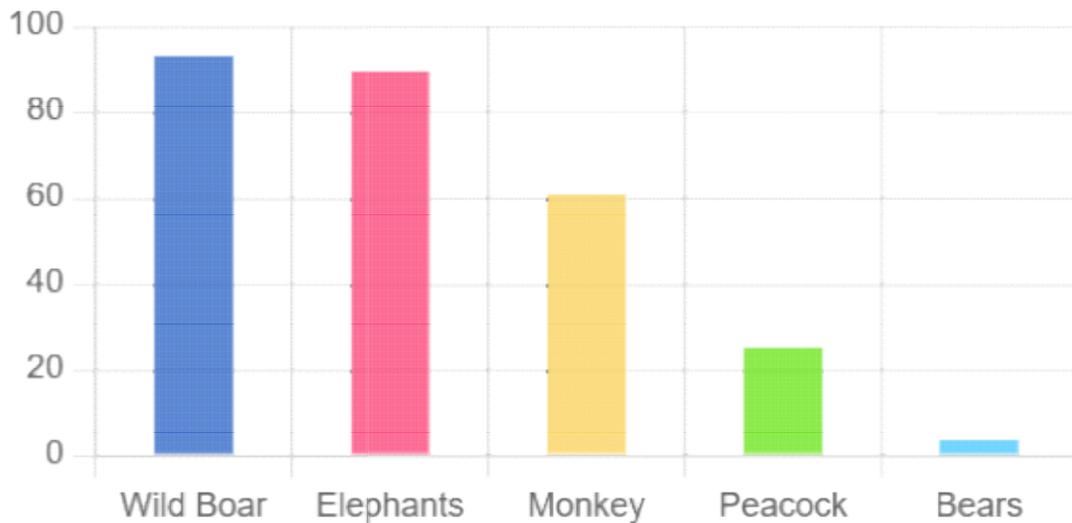

Eco-Development Committees or eco-vikas samitis are present in nearly all surveyed villages except Pitki and Kathjhor. These committees are intended to facilitate conservation efforts and serve as a bridge between villagers and the Forest Department. However, 11 villages reported that their EDCs are currently inactive due to lack of engagement, absence of assigned tasks, or funding issues. Weak communication and growing mistrust between communities and officials have further led to the decline in EDC functionality.

Although the forest likely contains various medicinal plants, knowledge about them is limited due to widespread use of modern medicine. Only 11 villages reported familiarity with such plants, which are used for treating both humans and livestock.

Almost all villages acknowledged significant environmental changes. Many noted a decline in both plant and animal species, particularly fruiting and flowering trees, due to overextraction. In some areas, old-growth trees are rare, with younger stands dominating. The spread of invasive species such as Lantana camara and Parthenium is also altering forest ecology. These invasive plants are not consumed by livestock and proliferate rapidly due to a lack of natural competition, restricting forest access in some areas.

HUMAN WILDLIFE CONFLICT

As Dalma functions as a crucial elephant corridor, human-elephant conflict has been a significant issue in the region. Elephants have been known to destroy crops, damage houses, and, in some cases, cause human fatalities. However, in recent years, their presence in the villages has decreased. When elephants do appear, villagers often drive them away using torches, tractors, firecrackers, and flaming mashaals—resources provided by the Forest Department in villages that frequently experience elephant visits.

Graph 21: Animals involved in HWC

Other wildlife, such as wild boars, monkeys, and peacocks, also cause substantial crop damage, particularly on farms located near forested areas. Unfortunately, no compensation is provided for losses caused by these animals. In a few villages, bears have been reported, and there have even been incidents of bear attacks on people. A recent sighting of a tiger within the sanctuary has further heightened fear and anxiety among villagers.

Livestock loss is primarily attributed to wild cats and hyenas, but there is no provision for compensation in these cases. Compensation is officially available only for property damage or fatalities resulting from elephant encounters. However, villagers reported that they rarely receive the promised compensation due to bureaucratic delays, which discourages them from applying at all.

CHALLENGES AND LIMITATIONS...

The field research team consists of only two female researchers, who, due to safety protocols, were required to be accompanied by forest officials at all times. This created an atmosphere of surveillance, and apprehension among the villagers to speak openly—especially on sensitive issues such as the collection and sale of timber.

With the rains setting in, many villages will become difficult to access due to poor roads. At the same time, villagers would be busy with agriculture-related activities given they only have one harvest season. This would make it difficult to mobilise more people for the survey compromising the variety and reliability of the village level data.

The issue of alcoholism has been repeatedly faced by the field team, who have encountered people under the influence of alcohol even during morning hours, raising serious concerns about safety and limiting the ability to conduct structured, one-on-one household level surveys.

There exists widespread mistrust among the villagers regarding the objectives of the eco-sensitive zone. Many people fear potential eviction or restrictions on land use because of miscommunication or incomplete understanding of ESZ guidelines.

Engagements with PVTGs would be challenging given the language barrier, hampering communication.

और एशियाई हाथी, दलमा वन्यजीव अभयारण्य में बेहद महत्वपूर्ण प्रजाति है, लेकिन इसके अलावा भी कई लुप्तप्राय प्रजातियाँ जैसे कि रैटल, जंगली कुत्ता, माउस हिरण, भारतीय विशाल गिलहरी, अजगर, छिपकली, नाग, इंगल, आदि भी इस अभयारण्य में पाए जाते हैं;

और इस अभयारण्य के जंगल बारिश के पानी को बाहर जाने से रोकते हैं, और जमीन के पानी को रिचार्ज करने में मदद करते हैं साथ ही मिट्टी कटाव को रोककर कीचड़ और स्लिट के जमाव से नदियों और झरनों को रक्षा करते हैं। अभयारण्य के अंदर 159 जलधाराओं का संज्ञाल है जो पूरे अभयारण्य में फैला हुआ है। इसमें से 82 सदाबहार या अर्द्ध सदाबहार है बाकी 77 जलधाराएँ मौसमी प्रकृति की हैं, जो सुवर्ण रेखा नदी, सुवर्णरेखा नहर और डिमना झील को पानी से भरती हैं;

और यह आवश्यक है कि दलमा वन्यजीव अभयारण्य के संरक्षित क्षेत्र के आसपास के क्षेत्र को पारिस्थितिकीय और पर्यावरणीय बिंदु से सुरक्षित और संरक्षित किया जाए ;

और पर्यावरण (संरक्षण) अधिनियम, 1986 (1986 का 29) की धारा 3 की उप-धारा (2) के अनुच्छेद (XIV) अनुच्छेद (V) के साथ पठित और उप-धारा (1) के अधीन पर्यावरण और वन मंत्रालय की प्रारूप अधिस्चना संख्या 691(ई) दिनांक 5 अप्रैल, 2011 भारत के राजपत्र, असाधारण में, जैसा कि पर्यावरण (संरक्षण) नियम, 1986 के नियम 5 के उप-नियम (3) की अपेक्षाओं के अनुरूप प्रभावित होने वाले संभावित व्यक्तियों की आपत्तियों और सुझाव राजपत्र में उपर्युक्त अधिस्चना को जनसाधारण के लिए उपलब्ध होने की तिथि से साठ दिवसों के भीतर मांगे गए थे;

और उपर्युक्त अधिस्चना की राजपत्र में छपी प्रतियाँ जनसाधारण को 5 अप्रैल, 2011 को उपलब्ध कराई गई थीं;
